

Stained furniture

Stain consists of color pigment which is dissolved in water and then used to color the surface of the wood to achieve a specific shade of color on the finished furniture. Stain is not a final treatment and is, therefore, subsequently covered with clear varnish to ensure durability and resistance to scratching.

Normal cleaning and maintenance

See painted furniture.

Special consideration

Damage to the surface of stained furniture is repaired with clear repair varnish. It is recommended that major damage and damage to the underlying stain be repaired at a professional carpentry workshop.

